What does membership mean for me?

From term one of your undergraduate degree, right through to the start of your career and beyond, being a member of the Society gives you access to a range of member only benefits to help further your knowledge and career.

Textbook discounts. Get a head start on the academic term with a 35% discount on Society textbooks.

Journal club. A free monthly webinar to review the latest research.

Conference grants are available for those presenting at conferences around the world.

Apply to be a representative on the Student Section, a chance to represent nutrition students nationally.

The jobs site. Register for job ad alerts covering a range of different nutrition and dietetic related careers.

Gain experience of presenting your research by submitting your abstract for one of the Society’s conferences.

The chance to be a Student Ambassador, working alongside your University Ambassador to promote the Society and benefits to your peers.

Summer Studentship Research grants, an opportunity for second year BSc students to carry out their own research project during the summer break.

Conference grants are available for those presenting at conferences around the world.

Apply for the Society’s Postgraduate Award. Winners present their research at the International Early Career Nutrition Research Championships.

Conference grants are available for those presenting at conferences around the world.

Gain experience of presenting your research by submitting your abstract for one of the Society’s conferences.

Publish. Members receive a 20% discount when they publish in one of the Society’s open access journals.

Stay up-to-date with the latest nutrition news via the Society’s monthly newsletter, social media channels, Proceedings of the Nutrition Society journal and the bi-annual Gazette.

And of course, Member-Connect allows you to network and collaborate with peers, academics and potential employers across the nutritional science community.